

Delegates of the Environmental Commission,

The Environmental Commission (EC) is dedicated to addressing the pressing environmental challenges that define the global needs of today; from climate change and biodiversity loss to pollution and sustainable development. This committee provides delegates with the opportunity to engage in conversation on issues that not only shape international relations, but also directly affect the lives of communities worldwide.

EC's goal is to tackle the root causes of environmental crises by proposing balanced approaches that combine environmental preservation and human innovation. Within this committee, delegates are tasked with formulating resolutions that highlight development and collaboration, ensuring that the resolutions presented are not just theoretical but can be implemented across the world.

This year's AMMUN theme, "Deliberate to Liberate," is particularly significant for EC. It reflects the necessity of thoughtful, collaborative dialogue in order to unshackle our planet and its people from the escalating consequences of environmental neglect. As a committee, recognizing that deliberate, well-informed decision-making is essential to free future generations from the threats of climate catastrophe and ecological collapse. The topics of this year's EC will include the global transition to a circular economy and waste management, the of the paris agreement on environmental mitigation efforts and addressing the impacts of climate change on agriculture and food security.

It is important for you to know that since AMMUN is a THIMUN-affiliated conference, the expectations are high. Delegates are expected to arrive well-prepared, with thorough research on the assigned topics, an understanding of their country's policies, and the ability to participate actively in debate. Keeping in mind that respect, professionalism, and adherence to parliamentary procedure are expected at all times. For EC to thrive, it is important to have an exchange of diverse perspectives, and for delegates to engage in debate that challenge the topic respectfully and contribute to resolutions.

As the chairing panel, we are committed to guiding you through this journey and fostering an atmosphere where your voices are heard and your ideas valued. We look forward to witnessing the dedication, innovation, and passion that each of you will bring to this committee.

Aya Zoumot,

President of the Environmental Commission
