

From my very first experience as a delegate at AMMUN XXII, I knew that I had a passion for debating, collaborating, and challenging myself to think beyond what I knew. My experiences as a delegate will always hold a special place for me, as they pushed me out of my comfort zone and showed me the power of dialogue. The thrill of representing a country, debating a topic and exchanging ideas with new people from different backgrounds ignited my enthusiasm for MUN. These experiences have taught me the importance of being informed on international affairs and being more exposed to global issues.

What began as curiosity quickly turned into a passion, as every conference brought new perspectives and opportunities for growth. I've come to realize that the most impactful moments in committees are not when one person takes the floor or gives a powerful speech, but when delegates build on one another's ideas and turn debate into collaboration.

Stepping into the role of president of the Environmental Commission at AMMUN XXIV, I see this conference as a chance for us, as a unified committee, to do just that. The environmental challenges before us call for strategies that can empower communities and safeguard the future of our planet. As you take on your roles, I encourage you to approach this committee with curiosity and to eliminate the fear of sharing your voice. Let this be a space where you push boundaries and work together to discuss solutions that extend beyond the pages of the resolution itself. I hope with my guidance, this year's conference can offer you the same sense of inspiration and purpose that my previous AMMUN experiences have given me.

President of Environmental Commission
