

Delegates of the Third General Assembly,

The Third General Assembly (GA3) is one of the most crucial pillars of the United Nations, working towards solving humanitarian, human rights, and social challenges that extend beyond borders. Since the foundation of GA3, it has served as a platform where countries gather and discuss those things which impact the dignity, safety, and equality of people around the globe. Its deliberations very often emphasize the common responsibility of the international community in ensuring the protection of the welfare of the civilians and putting humanitarian values at the center of worldwide cooperation.

Unlike technical committees, GA3 is not concerned with technical mandates or powers for funds. It is rather strengthened through universality, where each member state has equal voice in addressing key humanitarian challenges. GA3 is thereby a rare platform for dialogue, compromise, and consensus on common issues affecting millions of lives globally.

This year's AMMUN theme, "Deliberate to Liberate," is a particular close match for GA3's mandate. It is a message that actual change and liberation from oppression, injustice, and inequality begins with deliberation and common decisions. It is a challenge issued to the delegates in drafting their resolutions such that each resolution exhibits not only innovative concepts but a commitment towards liberation through diplomacy.

Throughout the course of the conference, GA3 will discuss three vital matters: child labor in South Asia, the impact of the Russia–Ukraine war on civilians, and gender parity in labor rights for Latin American women. These matters oblige delegates to think with empathy, enter debates with open minds, and strive for pragmatic solutions imbued in the spirit of justice and humanity.

As a THIMUN-affiliated conference, high expectations are demanded from every delegate. Delegates are requested to come well-prepared with background research, respectful and professional demeanor, and adherence to the rules of procedure. Dynamic debate, creative problem-solving, and sensitive compromise are the spirit of GA3, and the chairing panel aims to take the delegates through a challenging and rewarding experience.

We are eager to see you bring passion, intellect, and diplomacy to the committee. Together, let us deliberate to liberate, and craft resolutions to represent the very best of Model United Nations.

Zaid Tantash,

President of the Third General Assembly
