Human rights stand as the foundation of justice, freedom, and equality. They are not privileges granted by governments but inherent rights that every individual is entitled to from birth. Yet, across the globe these rights are challenged daily, through conflict, discrimination, poverty, or corruption. The Human Rights Commission exists to provide a platform where such issues can be addressed, reminding us that defending human dignity is both a responsibility and a duty for all nations.

In today’s interconnected world, the impact of human rights violations extends far beyond borders. A single act of injustice can spread outward, weakening communities, threatening peace, and damaging international cooperation. This is why global dialogue is essential. When we gather in councils such as this one, we do more than just debate policies but also strengthen our collective commitment to protecting the most vulnerable to ensure a more equitable world for future generations.

My journey in Model United Nations has given me the privilege to explore these issues from different perspectives, engaging with diverse delegates and fostering my skills in diplomacy, leadership, and collaboration. Through these experiences, I have come to appreciate the importance of empathy in negotiations and the power of strong resolutions to inspire real change.

It is therefore a true honor for me to serve as the President of the Human Rights Council for this year’s conference. I look forward to guiding debate and witnessing the innovative solutions you bring forward. I strive to ensure that this conference not only strengthens our understanding of human rights but also encourage us to become advocates for justice and equality in our own communities.

On that note, I hope this conference gives you both knowledge to learn from and memories to take with you moving forward.

Looking forward for the conference,

Ward Abualghanam

President of the Human Rights Commission
