Honorable Delegates of the Third General Assembly,

It is a great pleasure to welcome you all to the Third General Assembly at AMMUN XXV. As delegates, you are entering a committee that deals directly with some of the most pressing humanitarian, social, and human rights issues that people are facing around the world. Throughout the conference, you will need to look beyond simple solutions and remain open-minded when considering different perspectives, with the aim of working together to develop resolutions that are both realistic and meaningful.

The Third General Assembly is not only a committee where you debate policy, but also one where you consider the way international decisions affect individuals and communities. As delegates of your assigned countries, you will have the responsibility of defending your national interests while remaining aware of the values and principles of the United Nations.

This year's theme, "Modifying Morality," is especially relevant to the mission of GA3, as it calls us to remember that our understanding of what is right, fair, and acceptable can be challenged by the situations taking place around us. Throughout the conference, you will be encouraged to question how these ideas influence international responses and whether accepted practices should change when they place vulnerable groups at risk.

This year, the Third General Assembly will address three major issues: attacks on schools in Sudan and Ukraine, the human impact of fast fashion in Bangladesh, and child malnutrition in South-Central Somalia. Although each topic takes place in a different context, they all raise important questions about responsibility, protection, and the limits of what the international community should be willing to accept.

As President of the Third General Assembly, I hope to create a committee where every delegate feels confident contributing to debate and challenging the ideas presented in the room. The chairing panel and I look forward to seeing you research your countries carefully, engage actively in debate, and remain open to cooperation throughout the conference.

Once again, welcome to AMMUN XXV. Together, let us make this conference meaningful and impactful, while also creating an experience that you will remember long after the final session.

Jana Kawalit

President of the Third General Assembly
