Ever since I can remember I've always cared about wildlife animals, plants and the ocean. As I grew older, I looked for new ways to try and help the environment. However, once AMMUN brought me into the Environmental Commission I felt where I belonged. I realized that the environment is facing true crisis and that it's up to us to act and take care of our planet. When I was first introduced to MUN I was scared and shy and it overall felt like a chore. Until I stepped out of my comfort zone and only then I found my deep passion for MUN.

Throughout MUN I found that being a leader doesn't mean that you should always know what's best, instead it's about making sure that you can create an environment where everyone can work together, feel heard and make a change. Through MUN I learned how to analyse different views and points carefully, listening carefully and really challenging myself to help make a change in the world. I found that MUN became one of the things I looked forward to the most, as I found myself counting down the hours to my next conference. As time moved on, I discovered that my passion for MUN had helped me gain skills in things like public speaking and debate skills I would've never learned elsewhere, while also treasuring memories and making new connections.

Throughout my chairing experience I found that I can help ensure that everyone in this committee can find the same love I found in this committee once I became a part of it.

I explored many different committees in AMMUN, and I'm committed to guiding delegates through debate and making sure that the committee's environment can help support delegates to finding relevant solutions.
